The Social Side of Washington

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Washington, D. C., August 13.—Announcement of the President's temporary return to Washington after his visit to St. Paul early in September, and the partial reunion of the Cabinet at the summer White House this week, was a pleasant prologue to the inextinguishable of the official clans for another season at the capital. It was also prophetic of at least one change in the President's official family. This anticipated passing of Mr. Ballinger as Secretary of the Interior, however much it is a "consummation" of what was hoped, is not without its regrets, for it means also the passing of Mrs. Ballinger as a Cabinet hostess, and the return of a social life to an exceedingly critical period in her husband's official life, and an important one to the administration in general.

Returning vacationers tell of meeting the Secretary of the Interior at the Delaware Water Gap, where they had as guests their son, a daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Philander. The latter, a Washington family group will spend Labor Day and a few subsequent weeks at the Knappa Valley Farm and return permanently to Washington about the time Mrs. Taft is settled here for the winter. Concerning the latter event, the Secretary of the Interior, since it is generally believed that the first lady of the land will have the summer of her life at the White House, during the coming season. The bride of such a happy circumstance was born of Mrs. Taft's allowing her to take her place at a semi-state dinner at the White House in the spring. Society in general and prospective debutantes in particular, have since been on the qui vive for the announcement of the date of the President's return, which will make her debut this winter emanates from the White House.

The Secretary of the Treasury's interest in the inauguration of the postal savings bank system authorized by the recent Congress, and his vacation and cause a correspondent's early return of Mrs. MacVeagh to the capital, Mr. and Mrs. MacVeagh are to be seen at the White House. Mr. N. H. from whence they motored this week to Beverly for a conference with the President and a visit to Mrs. Taft.

The British Ambassador and Mrs. Bryce, who are near neighbors of the MacVeaghs in the New Hampshire hills, were also callers at the President's home within the week. The reason for a feature rather than the reason for a visit to Boston, the stamping ground of Mrs. Bryce's maternal ancestors. While there, they were the guests of the Misses Loring, with whom they made several pilgrimages to historic and literary shrines, not omitting the disintegrating home of Louis M. Alcott.

While Washington was wondering whether or not it was to enjoy a visit from President Montt of Chile, Baron Kanetake Oura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce and Labor of Japan, arrived in the city, unheralded and unsung, but by no means unfeted. The Japanese ambassador is too good a diplomat for that, as evidenced by his quick return to Buenos Aires, where he is spending the summer. The baron and his party to this country much earlier than was anticipated when they went to London for the Japanese Exposition.

Prominent among the guests at the dinner given by the ambassador for the Japanese representatives here, was the representative here of the Japanese exposition to be held at the close of the Mikado's half-century on the throne.

The minister from Costa Rica is expected to arrive in the city after his family to Long Island for the grams were easily the most brilliant of myriads of electric lights helping heaven to illumine the course of the oxmen, and when the races were won or lost, lead them to their ladies for congratulation or consolation, as the case might be. The climax of the regatta, from the feminine point of view, was the dancing indulged in at the various club houses on the banks of the Potomac, after the "fight" was over. Prominent among the out-of-town dancers were Charles H. Black, James C. de Buys, E. Valion and H. G. Shears, of New Orleans. The latter represented a Crescent City boat club in the regatta, and New Orleans has demonstrated her desire for the big show by pledging $50,000 for the honor.

Quite an impetus will be given social affairs next week by the coming of the Esperanto Congress with several hundred delegates from all over the world. Many entertainments have been arranged, the most notable being the reception at the Bureau of American Republics on Wednesday evening, when John Barrett, president of the American Esperanto Society, will be the host. Perhaps the most picturesque event will be the ball of Friday evening, when the delegates are expected to follow the precedent established at the Congress in Rome last year, and wear their national evening dress. Features of the Sunday program will be the services in Esperanto held in St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church and St. Paul's Episcopal Church in the evening, a sacred concert will be given, the vocal part of which will be in Esperanto. With the Shell of Egypt, diplomats from thirty-eight countries, and half a thousand Esperantists, with the requisite number of Americans, present, the writer ventures to predict such a confusion of tongues as will suggest a modern Tower of Babel.
